Morales Persona and User Story Peer Review

Personas

1. Did the personas provide an appropriate amount of background?
    a. The personas had an appropriate amount of background, I did enjoy reading them and they felt like they could, in fact, be real people.
2. Did the personas provide an appropriate level of detail?
    a. These personas had enough detail in them to make them feel realistic without turning them directly into a list of goals.
3. Was the design of the personas appropriate?
    a. The design of these personas were simple and to the point, I personally prefer this method (may just be the engineer in me) but along the lines of the assignment, they could have had some more design features to them.
4. Was the text in the personas free of typos or misspellings?
    a. Yes
5. Is the writing style of the narrative appropriate?
    a. Very much so, the narratives were written in a manner that implied it came from a conversation with the persona themselves.
6. What are the strongest parts of these personas and why?
    a. The strongest part of these personas were the narratives because they sounded realistic and that is what made the persona come to life.
7. What are the weakest parts of these personas and why?
    a. Well, I honestly can't find one. These personas are thoroughly thought out, to the point and are generic enough to avoid being seen with any pre-existing paradigms.

User Stories

1. Do the user stories adequately address the User Goals from the personas? Explain why or why not.
    a. They address the goals from the laid out in the user personas.
2. Do the acceptance criteria seem appropriate in your opinion? Explain why or why not.
    a. I see a few lines in the user stories that are acceptance criteria for a few of the goals but there are goals that don't seem to have criteria at all. So, I do think they are appropriate for the goals they have been provided for but not for the missing ones.
3. Was the text in the user stories free of typos or misspellings?
    a. Yes
4. What are the strongest parts of these user stories and why?
    a. They walk through what the user is thinking and the story that the user is telling to relay an experience they had with the site in question.
5. What are the weakest parts of these user stories and why?
    a. I felt that there was a lack of acceptance criteria, or it was awfully hard to find.
